

Kalpesh Vyas
ENG 162W
3/5/19
Prof. Riazi

The Village

The village resides in the middle of forest within the trees. Each house has a normal family they dine and sing almost every day before they go to sleep. They tend to keep to themselves, they are not fond of outsiders and tend to attack anyone that is not part of their village. These people don't rely on technology to guide them, they are old fashioned. Everything they possess is made from mother nature. They work to support the village from hunting to crafting and everything in between. Sometimes they come together as a village and pray to their tree goddess and then celebrate by drinking and dancing. Every morning they wake up and pray for a fantastic day before they start harvesting crops. The morning dew glistens on the leaves and grass. As night falls the moon shines through the entire village and the trees begin to glow. The residents are not phased by this, it's a normal occurrence for them. The trees always stand tall, high above the ground, about 30 feet in the air. At the end of the day they stop their work of hunting and gathering and return home and go back to singing and eating with their families.